THE TRAIL RIDE TO ASSINIBOINE

By MARY CRANDALL

IT is a pleasantly disturbing sensation to feel that one is making history. Every member of the 1927 Trail Ride experienced that thrill this summer as they made their way through new and lovely country towards Mount Assiniboine.

About thirty-five miles due south of Banff, as the crow flies, and considerably farther as the pony travels, stands Mount Assiniboine, towering over her other lesser Alps, the most magnificent of all Rocky Mountain peaks. I say "most magnificent" not because I have seen them all, but because it is hard to imagine beauty that could transcend the beauty of Assiniboine, and because in the opinion of men "who know their mountains" there is nothing in Canada to which she can justly be compared.

It is rather odd to think that it is no longer than forty years ago that Assiniboine was visited by the first white man, although it was seen from a distance by Sir George Simpson in 1841, and it is at the same time rather wonderful to realize that this band of ours comprises probably about half of the number of people who have camped in this district which is destined to become, before very long, one of the greatest playgrounds in the mountains.

Not only was this summer's Trail Ride the longest and the highest and undoubtedly the most enjoyable one ever undertaken by this organization, but it is certainly the most important event in the history of the mountains for some years, because it has resulted in placing on the tourist map, Mount Assiniboine.

Breaking new trails into the wilderness; crossing a pass that has been crossed by few men and no other women; gazing on scenes that in millions and millions of years have been seen by but few other eyes than your own—that is what the Trail Riders did this summer.

They considered themselves pretty ambitious when they selected Assiniboine as the goal for their 1927 ride. The outward trail selected had been neglected for more than a score of years and several passes were known to be exceedingly difficult. During the winter, however, the Commissioner of Parks got busy and this summer we found our route to Assiniboine to be one of the best marked and finest trails in the mountains, and one that must become one of the most popular rides out of Banff.

The route to be taken was along the wild canyon of Brewster Creek, thence by way of Allenby Creek over Assiniboine Pass to Mount Assiniboine and homeward by the Valley of the Rocks, the alpine lakes and meadows on the Great Divide, Simpson Pass and Healy Creek.

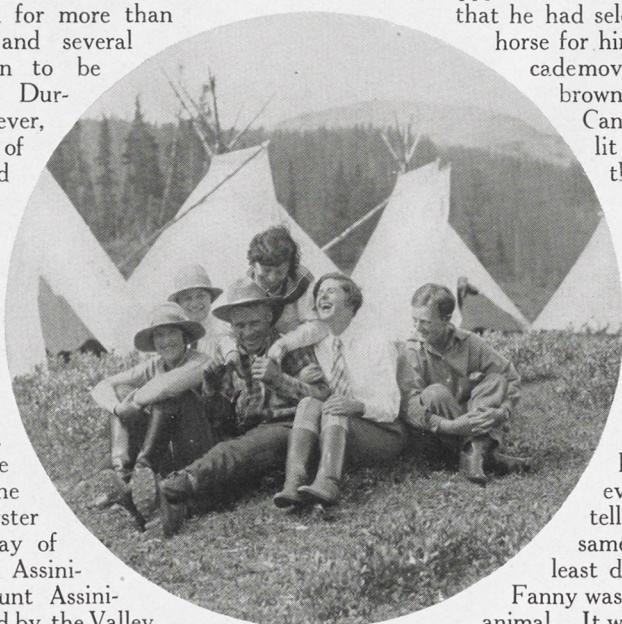

Such was the program, a program completed without a single mishap.

I often marvel now at the speed and absence of confusion with which we got away that morning (August 4). There we were, at eight-thirty, fifty-five eager trail riders, fifteen guides, more than a hundred ponies and a pile of duffle as big as a small sized house, and at nine o'clock the pack horses were loaded, and every rider was mounted, happy and satisfied in the knowledge that he had selected the sprightliest horse for himself, and the cavalcade moved off down the broad, brown trail from Sun Dance Canyon, through the sunlit morning, bound on the great adventure. I rode behind "Soapy," who in private life is Herb. Smith, and, I found out later, the wisest and kindest of these mountain guides. With his usual tact, "Soapy" informed me that I was riding the best horse in the string, and even though I heard him telling a dozen others the same tale, there is not the least doubt in my mind that

Fanny was anything but a noble animal. It was she and not I who earned the silver button which will be mine on payment of five dollars. We rode that day through pleasant valleys and over wooded hills to the first camp on Brewster Creek; we rode through sun showers and thunder showers, rain and hail, but nothing seemed to dampen the buoyant spirit of the Trail Riders.

We had passed scores of places that brought the inevitable "ahs" and "ohs," but I want to describe one place that will always stand out in my mind as one of the most beautiful I have ever seen. It is found high up on the upper reaches of Brewster Creek. We had ridden an hour or two along the base of the massive Bourgeau range, while always in front was the glacier where the creek gets its start on its journey to the Bow River. We had passed Fatigue Mountain and Fatigue Creek and travelled some time through a great deal of standing timber. Suddenly we entered a park country, a country where the vivid green is made more vivid by contrast. The trail wound among great trees where was no underbrush and the horse's feet made not the slightest sound as he trod on the thicket carpet of moss. Then we broke from the big forest into a high valley of wonder and delight. It was something like a great bowl. It was green and quiet and peaceful, and there was a little ice-cold creek winding its placid way through the valley. It was here we camped on the first night out.

We found ourselves wondering, next morning, just where we were going from here. Remember we were surrounded on three sides by lofty mountains and there was no break except by the way we came in. We followed the guide and found ourselves being led up the most remarkable switchback trail we had ever seen. Up and up, while our ponies breathed heavily, and we looked down, awed to find so vast a portion of the world beneath us. Up the flower-covered hillside, past the timber line where forget-me-nots as blue as delphiniums grew among the grey rocks. Up through the snow and over the top to where we could look down on another wonderful valley. Nine thousand feet, that pass.

That night we reached Assiniboine.

I shall always remember Assiniboine as I saw her early the morning following. The morning light discovered to us a field of ice poised ethereally on clouds, though night had not gone from the valley; and above ice was a tincture of rose on far peaks. Then the clouds rose and the golden flood of day poured down upon us. As the mists melted, Assiniboine took form and emerged from indistinctness, a great goddess, her head still lost in clouds, a blue glacier sprawling from her shoulders down into the bluer lake which lay at her feet.

It is hard to say how many different ways that day at Assiniboine was spent by the different members of the Ride. The artists and photographers disappeared early after breakfast; some of the more energetic explored the surrounding lake and mountains, and some, I think, were just gloriously lazy, feeling, I suppose, that they would have to go a long way before they found anything as lovely as Assiniboine.

The Marquis D'Albizzi was the Trail Riders' host at Assiniboine. Here he and his cousin, the Duke of Leuchtenberg, have opened up a new dude ranch which is rapidly becoming a very popular resort.

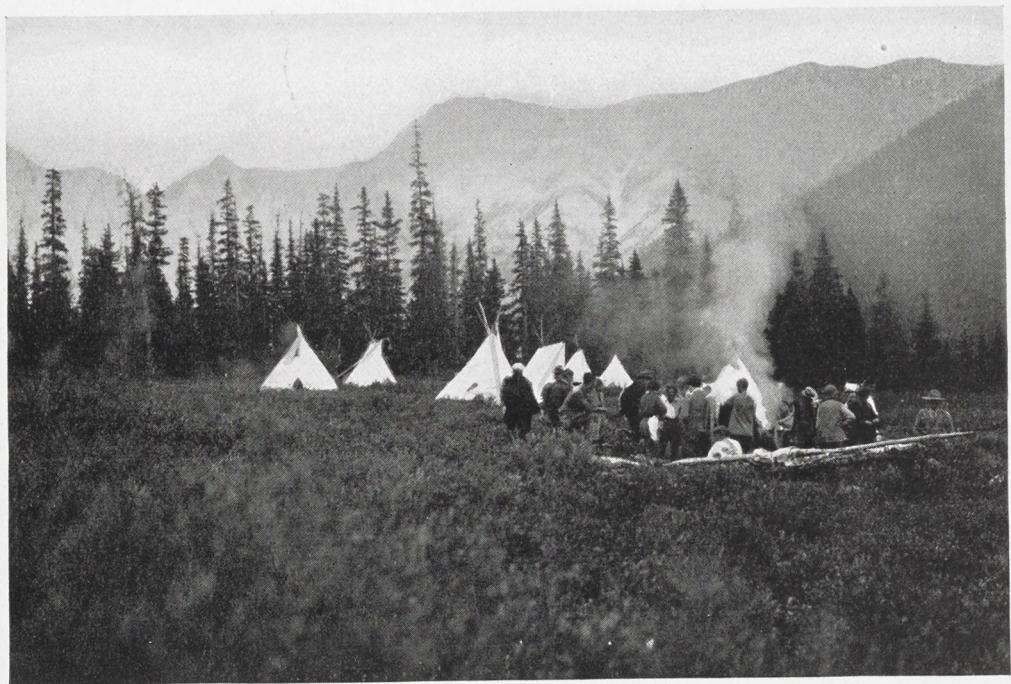

On the fourth day we turned homeward, taking another trail, the first part of which lay through the weird monoliths of the Valley of the Rocks, a barren desolate area in which the only sign of life is the occasional shrill whistle of the startled marmot. Then on through Golden Valley to the foot of Fatigue Pass, where the riders were cautioned to dismount and lead their horses on the tortuous 3,000 foot ascent into the Pass, which has an altitude close to 9,000 feet. I guess we were all a pretty hardened lot by that time, no longer upset by dizzy heights and steep rocky trails, because everyone made that steep hour-and-a-half pull on horseback.

There is always a reward after one of these steep climbs, and this time it was a broad mountain meadow dotted with a hundred varieties of alpine flowers, stretching for miles, far above a sea of lesser peaks that under the shadows of moving clouds seemed to roll and heave like a great ocean.

The Pow-Wow was held at Sunshine Camp on August 8, where the Riders were joined by other members who rode out from Banff. That night, under the big Sun Dance tent, there were songs and speeches, the election of new officers, and a discussion of plans for next year, when it was provisionally decided that next year's annual ride would have for its objective the Lake of the Hanging Glaciers. Walter D. Wilcox gave an interesting talk on the Assiniboine district and Harry Pollard described the difficulties which beset his ascent of the mountain some years ago.

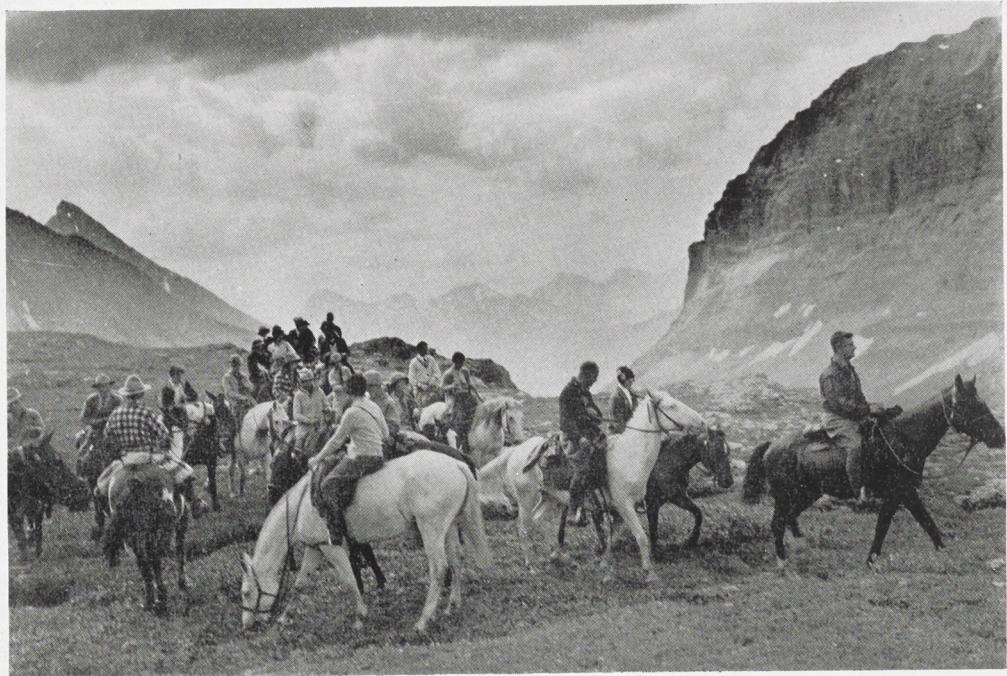

The next day a reluctant, happy, healthy band rode into Banff carrying with them a store of wonderful memories: and so the Trail Ride of 1927—the best one yet—was ended.

Certainly one of the reasons why the last Trail Ride has been voted the best is Bert Ward—Bert, slayer of grizzlies and outfitter, who was in charge of all the arrangements of the ride. So its "hats off" to Bert (who, by the way, can make a tepee fire like no one else in the world) and Soapy (who is a master hand at making beds of spruce boughs) and all those other fine fellows, including Red (whose call "Come and get it—or we'll throw it away" beats all other sounds we have ever heard).

Morley Roberts, the noted English novelist, who was present at the Pow Wow in Ptarmigan Valley, 1926, has written a fascinating book of travel and reminiscence entitled "On the Old Trail" (Eveleigh Nash—London), in which there are numerous references to the Trail Riders, such as that here quoted:—

"But what and why are the Trail Riders, and what do they do? They are a very pleasing order, and the ends and aims of the Association are such that they tend to encourage the natural delight of humanity in nature, especially in the mountains of Western Canada. For them the hills are not mere obstacles, nor are the forests growths to be coined ruthlessly into dollars. Perhaps it may be said that they do not seek merely for bodily health, but for the balanced health of mind which loves and enjoys beauty as much as strength, and indeed finds strength in beauty. Therefore it is their aim to preserve it from the devastation of mere commercialism as jealously as they would preserve the crowning glory of the forests from fire. To keep an open trail and an open joyous heart and to learn the ways of wild life and of man about the camp-fire or in his struggle with difficulty, so that they may not be ignorant of the land they live in or lack knowledge and courage to face life wherever they meet it are, I think, the real ends they seek. The words of their rules are good and aptly chosen. These I shall not copy, for I think this little comment on the text of their scripture catches something of the spirit which inspires them. To feel in this way does not mean any less merriment or any abatement of the youthful spirit. To this I can so cheerfully bear witness that I feel sure every word of this trifling record of Ptarmigan Valley corroborates all I have ventured to say."

"Is there not a cheerful touch, too, in the very notion of a number of people, mostly young, who, it may be, know as little about horses as does a "hog about harmony," tackling the Rockies and camping out at nights? So folks from near and far, yes, even from Montreal, Quebec and New York and the Atlantic Coast, rush joyfully to the mountains when the summer comes, and divesting themselves of civilized raiment, discarding a woman's plumes of paradise for striped blanket coats, mackinaws, thick socks and stockings, heavy boots and "slickers," or oiled rain-coats, plunge among the higher valleys and snow mountains. True enough they may at times chatter with their teeth and freeze and curse, but after all the morning comes and, if they are not too sore after the manner of amateurs, a great day is before them.

We were green as grass is,
So that cows could eat us,
When we passed them riding;
Bears we feared might meet us.
Now we're brown as berries
And have learnt the uses,
In the sorest manner,
Of our good cayuses.

Once we knew a pony,
Like each thorny question,
Had two sides, but which one?
East one or the west one?
Now we know it's safer,
Though it seemed to spite one,
To ascend the left side,
Which is not the right one."
